Join us as Kimberley Law and Culture Centre's Director of Cultural Projects, Wayne Barker and Prof. Mark Kenny of ANU, engage in conversation to consider the significance of the 'Following the Trade Routes project'.

The project's research is supporting rejuvenated cultural practice, trade and alliances between Aboriginal groups in the Kimberley, Central Australia and South Australia, reconnecting this network of Indigenous cultural practitioners with archival and research knowledge from across a range of disciplines and "feeding the cultural well".

This conversation will explore the project and its cultural and political significance for deepened understanding of Australia's past, present and future.

This seminar is co-hosted by the Centre for Heritage and Museum Studies and The Australian Studies Institute at the ANU.
